Save the Mekong: Our River Feeds Millions

The Mekong River is the region's lifeline and cultural heritage and must be protected. The livelihood and the voices of people living and depending on the Mekong's rich resources should come first before the construction of any mega-projects on the river. There are better ways than big dams to meet the region's electricity needs using the latest energy efficient and renewable technologies. Securing electricity supply in a peaceful way will avoid cross-border disputes arising from these cross-border dams' impacts.

Take action now to Save the Mekong!
Write to the Prime Ministers of Cambodia, Laos, Thailand and Vietnam and ask them to keep the Mekong flowing freely.

The Mekong River is under threat. The governments of Cambodia, Laos, and Thailand are presently considering plans to build eleven big hydropower dams on the river's mainstream. If built, these dams would block migration and dramatically change the Mekong's environment and the security and income of millions of people.

To The Prime Ministers of Cambodia, Laos, Thailand and Vietnam

CC: Mekong River Commission Council
: Mekong country donors

I am writing to express my concern about plans to build hydropower dams on the Mekong River's mainstream that will impact the river's environment and natural resources, including natural flow, biodiversity and ecosystem. Please listen to the voice of the Mekong's people and keep the Mekong flowing freely, saving this critical source of food and income for millions of us. Please consider better ways to meet our electricity needs and avoid creating cross-border impacts and disputes.
